

Look-alike contest?

Ubuntu is a modern and userfriendly version of Linux, the free operating system.
Read more at www.ubuntu.com and www.ubuntu-uk.org!

More similar than you think!

It might not seem fair to compare Windows to an old, broken window with iron bars and Ubuntu to a life-buoy, but the comparison is actually quite striking.

Not only is Windows often broken with viruses and spyware running rampant, it's also enclosing and limiting with license agreements, license fees and programs that needs to be bought expensively and absolutely may not be shared among friends.

Ubuntu on the other hand is just like the life-buoy made for us to help each other.

Behind Ubuntu you won't find a lonely, greedy company but a community of tens of thousands of companies and individuals who see a greater long-term gain in creating a good and free system for us all, independent of language, economy and technical knowledge. That's why Ubuntu can be downloaded for free and may be copied among friends and family. That's why Ubuntu both is easy to use and powerful and modifiable for the technically adept. That's also the reason generous promises of a forever free product is given instead of demands that you read and accept comprehensive license agreements.

In addition to this Ubuntu is free from viruses and spyware and comes with the best free programs for the home and office.

Ubuntu has taken its name from an ancient African word meaning "humanity towards others". We think that is a very appropriate name for a product which is based on community and cooperation!

